working on an Economic Stimulus Package that will be implemented post the COVID-19. "Allow me to take this opportunity to express my profound gratitude to all workers across Botswana for the significant contribution that they continue to make towards the socio-economic development of this country. Their commitment and dedication to work truly demonstrates clear patriotism towards their country," President Masisi said.

Of importance, he said was the working conditions of employees as they border on social justice and socio-economic progress for all which determined the political and economic stability of any country. He said it was therefore important to create decent working conditions, decent jobs, to ensure security in the work place and provide social protection for families.

The President said it was disheartening that labour day was commemorated at a solemn moment when the impact on the global economy had been severe as the world was witnessing markets plunging to historic low levels.

He however expressed optimism that the battle against COVID-19 shall be won. "Our factory machines shall grind again, our productive forces shall once again get back to work and contribute meaningfully towards the rebuilding of our economy. When that time comes I, urge our labour force to give everything their all and ensure that we rise again," he said.

Nurses Hailed For Their Dedication

President of the Botswana Nurses Union (BONU) Obonolo Rahube has hailed all health workers for their continued dedication to their profession.

Speaking in the event of the Workers Day he said "it is not surprising that during Labour Day we find ourselves working because that's the nature of our job."

Mr Rahube indicated that this year's Labour Day was to be celebrated under the theme 'End Covid19 and gear towards Botswana's economic independence' is totally different as it finds the world engulfed in Covid-19 pandemic.

"This was supposed to be a day to remember and efforts we put in daily at work but we find ourselves having to triple our efforts in the fight against Covid-19."

Mr Rahube explained that Labour Day is so much more than celebrating worker's rights, and union achievements, but "recognizing that by working together we can raise each other up, and do so much good in this world."

It is important for the public to remember that when someone coughs or sneezes, they spray small liquid droplets from their nose or mouth which may contain the virus. If you are too close to someone, you can breathe in the droplets, including the COVID-19 virus, if the person coughing or sneezing has the disease.

Therefore, the use of masks/face coverings is critical and effective when used in combination with specified personal hygiene practices and social distancing.

Flu symptoms? Then avoid public or shared space

The public has been reminded to avoid being in public or shared spaces (meeting rooms, where people work in large numbers) if one is showing flu like symptoms. As explained by the Director of Health Services Dr Malaki Tshipayagae during a press briefing, when one is showing flu like symptoms, they should first contact the National Health Line 16649 which will give them appropriate advice.
